The Welsh Parliament is the democratically elected body that represents the interests of Wales and its people.

Commonly known as the Senedd, it makes laws for Wales, agrees Welsh taxes and holds the Welsh Government to account.

The UK Constitution

The UK is a Parliamentary democracy which has a constitutional Sovereign as Head of State. This also makes the UK a constitutional monarchy.

The Sovereign's role in the UK's constitutional arrangements has developed over time. Today, the role is largely ceremonial with executive power being exercised by the Sovereign's Government, which has a democratic mandate to govern.

The government is led by a Prime Minister appointed by the Sovereign, who also appoints ministers on the Prime Minister's advice. The UK Government is directly accountable to the UK Parliament which consists of the Sovereign, the House of Commons and the House of Lords. The government of the day holds office by virtue of its ability to command the confidence of the House of Commons.

Power has also been devolved in the UK to legislatures in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland. They generally have legislative competence on all matters which are not expressly reserved (and 'excepted' in the context of Northern Ireland) to the UK Parliament.

More limited powers have been devolved to English regions and groups of local authorities known as combined authorities. The Mayor of London and London Assembly were established in 2000, with further areas, such as Greater Manchester, gaining limited devolved powers since 2014.

To represent the devolved nations in the UK Government, territorial offices of state in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are headed by Secretaries of State which are cabinet level ministers in the UK Government.

A key tenet of the UK's constitution is that the UK Parliament is the supreme legal authority in the UK. This is known as the principle of parliamentary sovereignty. Under the orthodox understanding of the term, the UK Parliament has unlimited power to make or unmake any laws as it sees fit. Generally, the courts cannot overrule its legislation and no Parliament can pass laws that future Parliaments cannot change.

The principles above all form part of the UK's constitution. However, unlike most countries, these constitutional concepts are not consolidated in a single document. Because of this, the UK is often said to have an 'unwritten constitution'. However, it's more accurate to say that the UK doesn't have a codified constitution.

The UK's constitution has evolved over time and consists of various sources such as institutions, statutes, judicial decisions, principles and practices commonly understood as 'constitutional'.

Sources may include documents of constitutional significance, such as the Magna Carta, statutes underpinning the devolution settlements, the Royal Prerogative and the unwritten practices recognised as constitutional conventions.

History of Devolution in Wales

Devolution is the term used to describe the process of transferring power from the centre to the nations and regions of the United Kingdom.

UK devolution is asymmetric. Unlike a federal system, where states or provinces share sovereignty with the centre and have comparable powers with each other, the devolved arrangements in the UK differ between territories. This stems from historical anomalies in the evolution of UK nations, such as contrasting legal jurisdictions and institutions, and the piecemeal nature of devolution in the UK.

This section explores some of the main events along the process of devolution in Wales to date.

Administrative Devolution

The roots of political devolution in Wales can be traced to the end of the nineteenth century. In 1881, the Sunday Closing Act became the first piece of Wales-specific legislation to be passed in the UK Parliament.

The twentieth century saw the beginning of administrative devolution in Wales through the creation of the Welsh Board for Education in 1907, described as the "first recognition by any government department that separate treatment was necessary for Wales".

The trend for administrative decentralisation continued in the early twentieth century with the establishment of the Agricultural Commissioner for Wales in 1912. By the 1950s, 17 departments had established administrative units in Wales which has been characterised as an ‘entirely pragmatic’ development, rather than reflecting ‘any overall plan for devolution’.

In the early 1950s, a series of developments started the process of shifting powers from Westminster to Wales. Petitions to create a Secretary of State for Wales were turned down by the Labour Government of 1945-50, which, as a substitute, created a Council for Wales and Monmouthshire in 1948. This was an unelected body that advised the government on Welsh affairs.

In 1951, the Conservative Government created a new junior Home Office Minister for Welsh Affairs. The Minister had no executive powers and was answerable to the Commons for the general effect of government policy in Wales. The post was upgraded to Minister of State in 1954.

Following the 1964 election, the office of Secretary of State for Wales was created by the new Labour Government. The following year, the Welsh Office was established to execute UK Government policy in Wales.

The Secretary of State’s executive powers were initially limited to responsibility for housing, local government and roads. But the responsibilities of the office were gradually extended to include trade, the environment and agriculture. Health was added in 1968, and primary and secondary education in 1970.

Responding to the increasing interest in self-government in Wales and Scotland, the UK Government established the Royal Commission on the Constitution in 1969. The Kilbrandon Commission, as it was known, recommended the establishment of an Assembly for Wales in its 1973 report.

In 1974 this led to the Labour Government publishing proposals for a directly elected assembly in Wales with executive, but not legislative powers. A referendum on the proposal was held in Wales on St David’s Day in 1979. The proposal was rejected in Wales by a majority of four to one.

In the immediate aftermath of the 1979 referendum, devolution became something of a dormant political issue in Wales. However, support for devolution grew during the 1980s and 1990s. In May 1997 the incoming Labour Government’s manifesto included commitments to hold referendums on the creation of devolved administrations in Wales and Scotland.

A referendum was held on 18 September 1997 proposing the creation of a Welsh Assembly. The result was 50.3 per cent in favour, and 49.7 per cent against with a majority of just 6,721.

Executive Devolution

Following the 1997 referendum, the UK Parliament passed the Government of Wales Act 1998 which provided the legal basis for the National Assembly for Wales. It was created as a single body corporate, meaning there was no formal separation between the executive and the legislature.

The 1998 Act enabled executive functions (in other words, powers and duties) to be transferred from the UK Government to the National Assembly. These functions were in areas broadly equivalent to those previously held by the Secretary of State for Wales, such as agriculture, culture, economic development, education, health, housing, local government, social services and planning. Further legislation (known as Transfer of Function Orders) were then made under the 1998 Act to transfer a large number of executive functions in these areas to the National Assembly.

The National Assembly became responsible for carrying out all transferred function in respect of Wales.

In practice, the powers delegated to the Assembly were further delegated to the First Minister ('First Secretary' under the original 1998 Act), and then, in turn, transferred to individual ministers (known as Assembly secretaries in the 1998 Act) or civil servants.

The lack of formal separation between the executive and legislative branch of government proved confusing. People struggled to differentiate between those who exercised power (i.e. the Government) and the National Assembly as an institution, whose role was to hold the Government to account.

In an attempt to resolve the confusion, informal changes were made to the terminology associated with the first and second Assemblies. For example, around October 2000, the term 'Ministers' replaced the term 'Secretaries', 'First Minister' was used in place of 'First Secretary' and 'Cabinet' replaced the 'Executive Committee'. The term 'Welsh Assembly Government' began to be used to describe the policies and actions of the Cabinet, allowing the term 'National Assembly' to refer to the scrutiny, representative and legislative work of the legislature. Whilst the new terminology became engrained, they remained informal titles in the sense that they were not recognised in law at this time.

In 2002, the Commission on the Powers and Electoral Arrangements of the National Assembly for Wales was established. Known as the Richard Commission, in 2004 it recommended the legal separation of the executive and legislature as individual legal entities, the devolution of primary law-making powers to Wales, and an increase in the number of Members.

The majority of the Richard Commission's recommendations were accepted by the UK Government, and given effect by the Government of Wales Act 2006. This provided a new devolution settlement for Wales and signalled the next stage of devolution - legislative devolution.

Legislative Devolution

The Government of Wales Act 2006 ('the 2006 Act') formally separated the executive and legislature in Wales by creating the Welsh Government (originally the 'Welsh Assembly Government') as the devolved executive for Wales.

Significantly, the 2006 Act gave the National Assembly powers to pass its own primary legislation for the first time. This was initially in the form of 'Assembly Measures'. Measures could be passed on devolved matters listed in Schedule 5 to the 2006 Act.

This schedule could also be amended to add more devolved matters and further extend the Assembly's legislative competence. Such amendments were generally made using Legislative Competence Orders. 22 Assembly Measures were passed between 2007 and 2011.

The 2006 Act also provided for the Assembly to pass Acts, but this was subject to a confirmatory referendum. A referendum was held on 3 March 2011 in which 63.5% of voters supported further devolution by unlocking the Assembly's powers to pass Acts.

In October 2011, the UK Government established the Commission on Devolution in Wales, (commonly known as the Silk Commission) to review the financial and constitutional arrangements in Wales. It was asked to consider how the scope of devolution might be changed to better serve the people of Wales.

In 2012, the Silk Commission published Part I of its report, making recommendations on the financial powers of the Assembly. As a result of this report, the UK Government introduced the Wales Act 2014 which bestowed a number of new financial powers on Wales, including limited taxation and borrowing powers.

In March 2014, the Silk Commission published its second report entitled ‘Empowerment and Responsibility: Legislative Powers to Strengthen Wales’. The report recommended, inter alia, adopting a reserved powers model of devolution and the devolution of more powers to Wales.

The UK's coalition Government set out a series of proposals in response to the Commission's second report, including publishing a command paper in 2015 entitled Powers for a Purpose. Known as the St David's Day Agreement, this eventually resulted in the passing of the Wales Act 2017.

The 2017 Act changed the devolution settlement in Wales from a ‘conferred powers’ model to a ‘reserved powers’ model (these terms are explained in the Glossary). It also enshrined the Assembly, the Welsh Government and the laws that they make as a permanent part of the UK's constitutional arrangements.

Further reforms to the Senedd

In anticipation of the Senedd gaining new powers over its size and legislative arrangements under the Wales Act 2017, the Expert Panel on Assembly Electoral Reform was established to provide:

[...]robust, politically impartial advice on the number of Members needed to effectively represent the people of Wales, the most suitable electoral system, and the minimum voting age

The Panel, chaired by Professor Laura McAllister, made a series of recommendations for changes to the size of the Senedd, its electoral system and who could vote in Senedd elections.

Some of these recommendations were taken forward in the Senedd and Elections (Wales) Act 2020, which lowered the voting age to 16, allowed certain foreign citizens to vote and changed the name of the National Assembly for Wales to Senedd Cymru or Welsh Parliament.

Without the political consensus to take forward the rest of the reforms recommended by the Expert Panel, the Senedd established the Committee on Senedd Electoral Reform to examine the Panel's remaining recommendations and outline a “roadmap for reform” to inform political parties' policy positions and manifestos for the 2021 Senedd election.

Following that election, the Special Purpose Committee on Senedd Reform was established in October 2021 to come up with proposals to be included in a Welsh Government Bill to reform the Senedd. The Committee made 31 recommendations, some of which were different to those reached in previous reports and some agreed by only a majority of the Committee.

The Senedd Cymru (Members and Elections) Act 2024, which took forward some of these recommendations, expanded the size of the Senedd to 96 Members and introduced a Closed List electoral system. These changes came into effect at the Senedd general election in May 2026.

2. The Senedd

Section 1 of the Government of Wales Act 2006 (“the 2006 Act”) states that there is to be a parliament for Wales to be known as Senedd Cymru or the Welsh Parliament. It is often referred to as “the Senedd”. Before 2020, it was known as the ‘National Assembly for Wales’ or ‘Cynulliad Cenedlaethol Cymru’.

The Senedd is made up of 96 Members, elected using a Closed List proportional representation electoral system from 16 constituencies. Members are known as ‘Members of the Senedd’ or ‘Aelodau o’r Senedd’. They are elected for a four-year term of office.

The Senedd is the devolved law-making body for Wales. It passes primary legislation (Acts of Senedd Cymru) in a wide range of areas, including health and social services, education, transport and the Welsh language. The Senedd’s powers are determined by a ‘reserved powers model’. This means that the Senedd has competence to pass laws on any matter except those which are expressly reserved to the UK Parliament in the 2006 Act. This is covered in more detail in the ‘Acts of the Senedd and the Legislative Process’ section.

The Senedd is recognised as a permanent part of the United Kingdom’s constitutional arrangements by section A1(1) of the 2006 Act. Section A1(3) of the 2006 Act sets out the commitment of the UK Parliament and UK Government that the Senedd cannot be abolished except on the basis of the people of Wales voting in a referendum.

The Senedd’s procedures are governed by its Standing Orders. They prescribe the way Members should behave, how Bills are processed and how Senedd business is organised.

The Senedd is also the name of the main building which houses the debating chamber (Siambr) and committee meeting rooms. It was opened in 2006.

Plenary

The Senedd meets for Plenary sessions to hold debates, hear oral statements from the Welsh Government and to consider legislation. Each of the 96 Members of the Senedd can participate in Plenary sessions and they are chaired by either the Presiding Officer (Llywydd) or Deputy Presiding Officer (Dirprwy Lywydd).

The Senedd hosts weekly oral question sessions with the First Minister and at least four-weekly sessions with each Welsh Minister and the Counsel General.

Committees

Much of the Senedd's scrutiny work takes place in its committees. They have a dual function to consider policy matters (often through formal inquiries) and conduct legislative scrutiny at stages 1 and 2 of the legislative process (see section below on the legislative process) The remits of Senedd committees are decided by the Business Committee, however, there are some committees that are required in statute:

- An audit committee (often referred to as the Public Accounts Committee) is required by section 30 of the 2006 Act;
- A standards of conduct committee is required by section 30A of the 2006 Act; and
- The Llywydd's Committee, which oversees the income and expenditure of the Electoral Commission's functions in relation to devolved Welsh elections and referendums, is required by paragraph 16A of Schedule 1 to the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000.

The Senedd's Standing Orders also require committees to be established for these functions:

- A business committee to facilitate the effective organisation of Senedd business (Standing Order 11);
- A committee with finance functions (Standing Order 19 and 20);
- A committee with constitutional and legislative affairs functions (Standing Order 21); and
- A committee or committees with public petition functions (Standing Order 23).

Taxation Powers

The Wales Act 2014 and the Wales Act 2017 transferred some limited powers over taxation to the Senedd. These taxes are:

- The Welsh rates of income tax;

- Land Transaction Tax (replacing Stamp Duty Land Tax); and
- Landfills Disposal Tax (replacing Landfill tax).

Any changes to these taxes are proposed by the Welsh Government and must be approved by the Senedd.

Senedd Elections

As set out in section 3 of the 2006 Act, ordinary general elections for the Senedd are held on the first Thursday in May in the fourth calendar year following the previous ordinary general election.

Senedd elections cannot be held on the same date as a UK Parliament general election. If these dates were to clash, the Welsh Ministers can specify a different date for the Senedd election by Order. The Presiding Officer may also propose the holding of the poll at an ordinary general election on a day no more than one month earlier nor more than one month later than the first Thursday in May.

The Presiding Officer is required to propose a day for the holding of a poll at an 'extraordinary general election' if either of these two events occur:

- If at least two-thirds of the total number of Members vote in favour of a motion that the Senedd is to be dissolved; or
- If the Senedd fails to nominate a First Minister within 28 days of any of these events:
 - The holding of a poll at a general election;
 - The Senedd resolving that the Welsh Ministers no longer enjoy the confidence of the Senedd;
 - The First Minister tendering resignation to His Majesty The King;
 - The First Minister dying or becoming permanently unable to act or to tender resignation; or
 - The First Minister ceasing to be a Member of the Senedd (other than as a result of the dissolution of the Senedd).

Voting at Senedd elections

To vote in a Senedd election, you must be:

- Registered to vote in a Senedd constituency;
- 16 years old or over on the day of the election; and
- A British, Irish or qualifying Commonwealth citizen, EU citizen or a qualifying foreign citizen

Senedd elections use a Closed List proportional representation electoral system. Under this system, each person entitled to vote can vote for either a registered political party that has submitted a list of candidates for the constituency or an individual (independent) candidate.

Once the votes have been counted, seats are allocated to registered political parties and individual candidates using the D'Hondt method. Under D'Hondt, seats are calculated using the following formula:

$$\frac{\textit{Number of votes}}{\textit{Number of seats already won}+1}$$

This Senedd Research article includes more information about the Senedd's electoral system.

Filling vacant seats

In the event that the seat of a Member of the Senedd becomes vacant, it will be filled in one of two ways:

- If the Member was returned as a Member of the Senedd from a list submitted by a registered political party, they will be replaced by the next eligible and willing person on that political party's list from the last general election. If there is no one who satisfies these conditions, the seat remains vacant until the next general election.
- If the Member was an individual candidate when returned as a Member of the Senedd, the seat remains vacant until the next general election.

Disqualification of Members of the Senedd

In order to stand as a candidate at a Senedd election a person must:

- Be at least 18 years old;

- Be a British citizen, a qualifying Commonwealth citizen, a qualifying foreign citizen, a citizen of the Republic of Ireland or a citizen of the European Union who is resident in the United Kingdom; and
- Be registered in the register of local government electors in a Senedd constituency.

Certain office holders are disqualified from becoming a Member of the Senedd and from standing as a candidate. These include:

- Judges;
- Civil servants;
- Members of the regular armed forces;
- Members of a police force;
- Members of a legislature outside the UK;
- The Auditor General for Wales;
- The Public Services Ombudsman for Wales;
- A lord-lieutenant, lieutenant or high sheriff of any area in Wales;
- A commissioner or investigating commissioner for the Equality and Human Rights Commission;
- The Children's Commissioner for Wales (and Deputy Commissioner);
- The Older People's Commissioner for Wales (and Deputy Commissioner);
- The Welsh Language Commissioner (and Deputy Commissioner) and members of the Advisory Panel to the Welsh Language Commissioner;
- The Future Generations Commissioner for Wales;
- Senedd Commission staff.

A full list of disqualified office holders is in Part 2 of Schedule 1A of the Government of Wales Act 2006.

Certain other office holders may stand as candidates at a Senedd election but would have to resign their office before taking the oath or allegiance. The latest list of these office holders can be found in the Senedd Cymru (Disqualification) Order 2025.

Persons are also disqualified from being a Member of the Senedd if:

- They have been convicted of an offence and sentenced or ordered to be imprisoned indefinitely or for more than a year and are detained anywhere in the UK, Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or in the European Union, or are unlawfully at large when they would otherwise be detained;
- They have been found guilty of committing a corrupt or illegal practice under the Representation of the People Act 1983 or of an offence relating to donations. These last for three years for an illegal practice and five years for a corrupt practice from the date a person is reported guilty by an election court or convicted;
- They are subject to the notification requirements of or under Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003; or
- They are the subject of a bankruptcy restrictions order or debt relief restrictions order or interim orders (or their estate has been sequestrated by a court in Scotland and they have not been discharged).

Political office holders are also disqualified from being Members of the Senedd. Members of the House of Commons, Scottish Parliament, Northern Ireland Assembly and members of a county, county borough or community council in Wales can stand as candidates at a Senedd election but must resign their position if elected. Members of the House of Lords can stand as candidates but must take a leave of absence from that legislature if elected as a Member of the Senedd.

Recall of Members of the Senedd

In March 2026, the Senedd agreed the Senedd Cymru (Member Accountability and Elections) (Wales) Act 2026, which sets out a system of recall for Members of the Senedd. This system allows the electorate an opportunity to determine whether a Member of the Senedd should retain their seat or be removed from office during their term as a result of certain circumstances.

There are two circumstances set out in the Act that would trigger a recall poll being held:

- A Member is convicted of a criminal offence in the UK and receives a prison sentence of 12 months or less (Trigger Event A); or

- The Senedd votes to initiate a recall poll following a report of the Standards of Conduct Committee recommending recall (Trigger Event B).

A recall poll would ask voters in the Member's constituency whether they want the Member to retain their seat or to remove them from office. If a majority of those voting choose to remove the Member, their seat would become vacant. In this event, the seat will be filled in the same way as any other vacancy (see above).

The system is not yet operational and there are a number of steps that need to be taken before a Member can be subject to recall:

- Before any recall poll can be held, the Welsh Ministers must make a piece of secondary legislation to set out the details about how a poll is to be conducted.
- The Standards of Conduct Committee will need to prepare recall guidance, subject to the approval of the Senedd, before a recall poll under 'Trigger Event B' can be instigated.

The Member Accountability Bill Committee concluded in its stage 1 report on the (then) Bill that recall (particularly for Trigger Event B) will not be operational until "a significant period into the Seventh Senedd".

3. The Presiding Officer and Deputy Presiding Officer

The offices of Presiding Officer ('Llywydd') and Deputy Presiding Officer ('Dirprwy Lywydd') were created by the Government of Wales Act 1998 (and subsequently provided for in the Government of Wales Act 2006).

At its first meeting after a Senedd general election, the Senedd must elect a Presiding Officer and a first Deputy Presiding Officer. The Senedd can also decide to elect one additional Deputy Presiding Officer. However, this can be done at any time during a Senedd term and does not need to be done at the first meeting after a Senedd general election. In the Standing Orders these are referred to as the 'first' and 'second' Deputy Presiding Officers. The Presiding Officer serves the Senedd impartially and their main role is to chair Plenary, maintain order and protect the rights of Senedd Members. They are responsible for ensuring that business is handled on the basis of equality and impartiality. They are also responsible for Standing Orders and the final authority on their interpretation. The Presiding Officer also plays an active role in representing the Senedd and Wales' interests on a national and international basis.

The Deputy Presiding Officer(s) deputises as necessary for the Presiding Officer. The Presiding Officer's functions may be exercised by the first Deputy Presiding Officer if the Presiding Officer's office is vacant, or if the Presiding Officer is for any reason unable to act. In the event that the offices of Presiding Officer and first Deputy are both vacant, or if they are both unable to act, the second Deputy (should one be in office) must exercise the functions of the Presiding Officer. The Presiding Officer may also, subject to Standing Orders, authorise the Deputy Presiding Officers to exercise functions of the Presiding Officer.

Officer Holders

	Presiding Officer	Deputy Presiding Officer
Seventh Senedd	Huw Irranca-Davies MS	Kerry Ferguson MS
Sixth Senedd	Elin Jones MS	David Rees MS
Fifth Senedd	Elin Jones MS	Ann Jones MS
Fourth Assembly	Dame Rosemary Butler AM	David Melding AM

Third Assembly	Rt.Hon. the Lord Elis-Thomas AM	Dame Rosemary Butler AM
Second Assembly	Rt.Hon. the Lord Elis-Thomas AM	Dr John Marek AM
First Assembly	Rt.Hon. the Lord Elis-Thomas AM	Jane Davidson AM and Dr John Marek AM

Election of the Presiding Officer and first Deputy

At the first meeting after a Senedd election, the Senedd must elect from its Members a Presiding Officer and a Deputy Presiding Officer. The Standing Orders state that the Presiding Officer and Deputy Presiding Officer must not belong to:

- the same political group;
- different political groups both of which have an executive role; or
- different political groups neither of which has an executive role.

In effect, this generally means that one will be from the governing political group (or groups) and the other from the opposition. However, if circumstances change during a Senedd term resulting in the Presiding Officer and their Deputy falling within one of these restricted categories (such as belonging to the same political group), any Member may propose a motion that they may remain in office.

This happened in the Third Assembly, when The Rt.Hon. the Lord Elis-Thomas AM and Dame Rosemary Butler AM served as Presiding Officer and Deputy despite belonging to the political groups that formed a coalition government.

Election of a second Deputy Presiding Officer

At any time during a Senedd term, the Presiding Officer, having consulted the Business Committee, may propose by motion that the Senedd agrees to elect a second Deputy Presiding Officer. The second Deputy holds office until such date as indicated within the motion, or if it does not specify the date, the second Deputy ceases to hold office on the dissolution of the Senedd.

The Standing Orders state that the Senedd must not elect a second Deputy who belongs to:

- the same political group as either the Presiding Officer or first Deputy;
- a political group which has an executive role, if the Presiding Officer and first Deputy both belong to political groups which have an executive role; or
- a political group which does not have an executive role, if the Presiding Officer and first Deputy both belong to political groups which do not have an executive role.

As with the election of the Presiding Officer and the first Deputy, this Standing Order requirement can be disapplied by a resolution of the Senedd passed by at least two-thirds of Members voting in support of it.

Voting in proceedings

The Presiding Officer and Deputy Presiding Officer(s) may only generally vote in Senedd Plenary proceedings to exercise a casting vote when chairing a Plenary meeting. The scope of this power is set out in Standing Order 6.20.

If further discussion of a matter before the Senedd is possible, the Presiding Officer or Deputy must vote in the affirmative (i.e. in favour of a motion). Conversely, they must vote against motions when further discussion is not possible. For example, if there is an equality of votes in the final stage of passing a Senedd Bill, there is no scope for further discussion meaning the Presiding Officer or Deputy would be obliged to vote against the Bill.

Apart from casting votes, the Presiding Officer and Deputy(s) may also vote in Plenary proceedings where legislation requires a motion to be passed on a super-majority basis (i.e. a vote in which the number of Members voting in favour of it is not less than two-thirds of the total number of Senedd seats).

Term of office

The Presiding Officer holds office until a new Presiding Officer is elected. In practice, this means that the Presiding Officer does not automatically cease to hold office as a consequence of dissolution before a Senedd general election. Conversely, the first Deputy Presiding Officer ceases to hold office on the dissolution of the Senedd. If a second Deputy Presiding Officer is elected, they also cease to hold office at the dissolution of the Senedd but could hold office for a shorter time if specified in the motion tabled for their appointment (see above).

Office holders may resign, and would also cease to hold office upon ceasing to be a Senedd Member otherwise than by virtue of a dissolution (e.g. by resignation as a Senedd member) or by being removed from office by resolution of the Senedd.

Chairing the Senedd Commission

The 2006 Act created a body corporate called the Senedd Commission to provide the Senedd with the property, staff and services it needs (discussed in more detail below). The Commission's membership consists of the Presiding Officer and four other Senedd Members. The Presiding Officer chairs meetings of the Senedd Commission. If there is no Presiding Officer in post, or if the Presiding Officer is unable to act, then the Senedd Commission may appoint another of its members to preside over meetings.

Chairing the Business Committee

The Business Committee is responsible for the organisation of Senedd Business. Its role is to "facilitate the effective organisation of Senedd proceedings". The Presiding Officer chairs the meetings, which are attended by the Trefnydd and a Business Manager from each of the other political groups represented in the Senedd.

For these purposes, the Standing Orders define a political group as at least five Members belonging to the same registered political party that won at least one seat at the previous Senedd election. Five or more members not fitting this criteria may also form a political group if the Presiding Officer is satisfied that exceptional circumstances apply.

If there are five or more Members in the Senedd who are not members of political groups, they can form a grouping in order to have a representative as a member of the Business Committee. If there are fewer than five Members in the Senedd who are not members of a political group, they can each attend Business Committee proceedings.

Presiding Officer functions and powers

These include:

- Power to vary the date of a Senedd general election by one month earlier or later than the statutory election date (section 4(1) of the 2006 Act);

- Administering the oath or affirmation to anyone giving evidence in Senedd proceedings (section 40 (1)(b) of the 2006 Act);
- Designating a person to act as First Minister on the recommendation of the Welsh Ministers if the First Minister is unable to act, has ceased to be a Senedd Member, or if the office is otherwise vacant (section 46(5) of the 2006 Act);
- Recommending to the Monarch the Senedd's choice of First Minister (section 47(4) of the 2006 Act);
- Deciding and stating whether the provisions of a Senedd Bill, in the Presiding Officer's view, are within the Senedd's legislative competence (section 110(3) of the 2006 Act);
- Requirement to be notified in various circumstances:
 - The name of a person to fill a vacant seat (section 11(3) of the 2006 Act);
 - A Member's resignation (section 15 of the 2006 Act);
 - If the Welsh Government issues a direction that a person need not comply with a call to attend Senedd proceedings or produce documents in their possession (section 38(5)(a) of the 2006 Act);
 - If a court in England and Wales convicts a Member of the Senedd of an offence for which the Member is sentenced or ordered to be imprisoned or detained (section 3 of the Senedd Cymru (Member Accountability and Elections) Act 2026) ("the 2026 Act").
- A duty to fix the date for a recall poll and notify the constituency returning officer for the Member's constituency (section 6 of the 2026 Act).

4. The Senedd Commission

The 2006 Act created the Senedd Commission. This is a statutory body created to provide the Senedd with the resources it requires to carry out its role effectively.

The Senedd Commission

Section 27 of the 2006 Act provides for the establishment, membership and functions of the Commission and compels it to provide the Senedd (or to arrange for the Senedd to be provided) with the staff, property and services required for its purposes.

The Commission's membership consists of the Presiding Officer and four other Senedd Members.

Appointment of Commission Members

As soon as reasonably practicable after a Senedd general election, the Senedd must consider a motion tabled by the Business Committee proposing the names of the four Members to be appointed as members of the Commission under the 2006 Act.

So far as is reasonably practicable, members of the Commission (other than the Presiding Officer) must belong to different political groups.

If there are four or more political groups in the Senedd, it is for the four largest political groups to inform the Business Committee of the relevant nominee from their political group.

If there are fewer than four political groups in the Senedd, each political group must inform the Business Committee of their nominee and the Business Committee will determine the name of any additional Members to be nominated.

If there are two or more political groups with the same number of members, the Presiding Officer, having regard to the level of electoral support of each of the political groups in question, determines which of those political groups is to be regarded as the larger.

Resignation or Removal from Office

A member of the Commission resigns from the Commission by giving notice in writing to the Clerk, but the Presiding Officer cannot resign from the Commission.

Any Member may table a motion proposing that a particular Member (other than the Presiding Officer) be removed from the Commission. If the motion is agreed to in a Plenary meeting the Member is removed from the Commission with immediate effect.

Finance and Annual Report

After each financial year, the Commission must publish and lay a report before the Senedd relating to the exercise of its functions during that financial year.

The Senedd Commission must also prepare accounts for each financial year. The accounts are submitted to the Auditor General for Wales, the statutory external auditor of most of the Welsh public sector, for examination and certification.

Other duties and powers

Under Paragraph 8 of Schedule 2 to the 2006 Act, the Senedd Commission must apply the principles of sustainable development, equality of opportunity and equal treatment of the English and Welsh languages to the exercise of its functions.

Paragraph 5 of Schedule 2 also provides a power for the Senedd Commission to promote public awareness of the systems of devolved government and Senedd elections in Wales.

Clerk of the Senedd

Section 26 of the 2006 Act provides that the Senedd Commission must appoint a person to be the Clerk of the Senedd.

The Clerk is also the Senedd Commission's Chief Executive, the most senior member of Senedd Commission staff. They are responsible for ensuring that the Senedd, and the Members of the Senedd, are provided with the property, staff and services so that the Senedd inspires confidence and has a reputation for accessible and efficient democracy.

Under Schedule 2 to the 2006 Act, the Senedd Commission may delegate any of its functions to the Clerk. In turn, the Clerk may authorise any other Senedd Commission staff member to exercise functions on their behalf. If the office of Clerk is vacant, or if the Clerk is unable to act for any reason, any other Senedd staff member authorised by the Senedd Commission may exercise the Clerk's functions.

Under section 138 of the 2006 Act, the Clerk is also the Principal Accounting Officer for the Senedd Commission. The accounting officer has responsibility for ensuring that tax payers' money is spent in accordance with the law and with rules designed to ensure that it is spent appropriately and transparently.

The Clerk also has numerous procedural functions under Senedd Standing Orders and the 2006 Act, including:

- witnessing new Senedd Members taking oaths or making affirmations of allegiance;
- publishing and maintaining details of forthcoming Senedd business;
- arranging an election to appoint a temporary Presiding Officer if both the Presiding Officer and Deputy Presiding Officer(s) are unable to act;
- receiving notification that a Senedd Bill has received Royal Assent and notifying the Senedd of the date of such consent;
- publishing standing orders from time to time; and
- being designated as the person to be notified in certain circumstances; such as Senedd Members wishing to add their names to motions, or members of the Senedd Commission wishing to resign.

5. The Welsh Government

The 2006 Act establishes the Welsh Government as the executive branch of the devolved political system in Wales. The Welsh Government is accountable to the Senedd.

The Welsh Government comprises the First Minister, the Counsel General and a number of Welsh Ministers and Deputy Welsh Ministers.

The executive powers of the Welsh Government include:

- the development and implementation of policy;
- the exercise of a range of devolved functions;
- making subordinate legislation; and
- proposing Acts of the Senedd.

The First Minister

The First Minister is appointed by the Monarch on the recommendation of the Presiding Officer, following a vote in the Senedd.

Nomination of a Senedd Member for appointment as First Minister is triggered by one of the following events:

- the holding of a poll at a general election;
- the Senedd resolving that the Welsh Ministers no longer enjoy the confidence of the Senedd;
- the First Minister tendering their resignation to the Monarch;
- the First Minister dying or becoming permanently unable to act or to tender their resignation; and
- the First Minister ceasing to be a member of the Senedd, other than on a dissolution (e.g. by resigning from the Senedd).

If any of these events occurs, the Senedd must nominate a First Minister within 28 days. If it fails to do so, the Presiding Officer must fix a day on which an 'extraordinary' general election will be held.

If the Senedd passes a vote of no confidence in the Welsh Ministers, the 2006 Act provides that the First Minister remains in office until a successor is appointed, but the Welsh Ministers must resign. The situation is resolved when the Senedd nominates a new First Minister (or re-nominates the same person as First Minister).

Welsh Ministers and Deputy Welsh Ministers

Once appointed, the First Minister may appoint Senedd Members to become members of the Welsh Government with the approval of the Monarch. Such Members may be appointed as Welsh Ministers or Deputy Welsh Ministers and may be removed from office at any time by the First Minister.

The First Minister may also recommend to the Monarch the appointment of a Counsel General. The office of Counsel General is discussed further below .

The 2006 Act limits the size of the Welsh Government to seventeen Ministers and Deputy Ministers, not including the First Minister and the Counsel General.

This maximum number can be further increased to eighteen or nineteen by regulations subject to the approval of two-thirds of Members of the Senedd.

Trefnydd

The Trefnydd is a Welsh Government Minister responsible for organising government business in the Senedd. The Trefnydd represents the Welsh Government at the Senedd's Business Committee and delivers a weekly business statement to the Senedd.

Accountability of the Welsh Ministers

The Welsh Government is held to account by the Senedd. Scrutiny takes many forms, including:

- Weekly oral questions to the First Minister:
 - Each week the Senedd is sitting, a maximum of 60 minutes must be made available in Plenary for the First Minister to answer oral questions. (Standing Order 12.56(i)). A ballot conducted on behalf of the Llywydd determines which Members may table questions.
- At least four-weekly oral questions to each Welsh Minister and Counsel General:

- When the Senedd is sitting, a maximum of 45 minutes at least once in every four weeks must be made available for each Welsh Minister and the Counsel General to answer questions in relation to their responsibilities (Standing Order 12.56(ii)).
- Written Questions to the First Minister, Welsh Ministers or Counsel General:
 - Standing Order 14 provides a framework for Senedd Members to table written questions to members of the Welsh Government relating to their area of responsibility. Questions must be tabled at least five working days before they are to be answered and are accepted at the discretion of the Llywydd.
- Power to call witnesses:
 - The Senedd has powers under the 2006 Act to require witnesses to attend Senedd Proceedings (including committees) to give evidence, or to produce documents which are in that person's possession or control relating to the exercise of the Welsh Ministers' functions.
 - In practice, this power is subject to numerous exclusions, but does mean that the Senedd has a statutory power to require Welsh Ministers to appear before the Senedd and its committees.

The Counsel General

Section 49 of the 2006 Act provides for the appointment of a Counsel General to the Welsh Government. Their role entails:

- providing legal advice to the Welsh Government;
- overseeing the work of the Legal Services Department and Office of the Legislative Counsel;
- overseeing representation of the Welsh Government in the courts;
- considering whether bills passed by the Senedd need to be referred to the Supreme Court for determination as to whether they are within the Senedd's legislative competence (exercised independently of government);

- performing other functions in the public interest including, where the Counsel General considers it appropriate, institute, defend or appear in any legal proceedings relating to functions of the Welsh Government (exercised independently of government); and
- responsibility for the accessibility of Welsh Law.

Under section 45(1)(c) of the 2006 Act, the Counsel General is a member of the Welsh Government.

This role is analogous with the role of the Attorney General and Solicitor General in the UK Government.

Terms of appointment

The Counsel General is appointed by the Monarch on the recommendation of the First Minister, but the recommendation must be approved by the Senedd.

The person appointed doesn't have to be a Member of the Senedd, but former incumbents have usually been serving Members.

The First Minister, Welsh Ministers and Deputy Welsh Ministers are all prohibited from holding the office of Counsel General under the 2006 Act. The Act also expressly prohibits the Counsel General from being appointed to any of those offices.

The First Minister may, with the agreement of the Senedd, recommend to the Monarch at any time the removal of the Counsel General. The Counsel General may also tender resignation to the Monarch at any time.

Unlike Welsh Ministers and Deputy Welsh Ministers, the Counsel General does not have to resign after a vote of no confidence in the Welsh Ministers. However, the Counsel General automatically ceases to hold office on the nomination of a new First Minister. But they may be re-appointed by the incoming First Minister.

If the office of Counsel General is vacant, or if the Counsel General is for any reason unable to act, the functions of the office can be exercised by a person designated by the First Minister. The designation is at the discretion of the First Minister, time-limited to six months and there is no requirement for approval by the Senedd or Monarch.

Participation of the Counsel General in Senedd proceedings

Standing Order 9 contains provision relating to the Counsel General. During Senedd proceedings, the Standing Orders set out that the Counsel General may do anything under the Standing Orders which may be done by Welsh Ministers.

If, however, the Counsel General is not a Senedd Member, Standing Order 9.4 provides that the Counsel General may participate in Senedd proceedings, but may not vote.

The Counsel General, whether a Member of the Senedd or not, is expected to answer oral and written questions and to make oral or written statements.

Section 34 of the 2006 Act deals with the participation of the Counsel General in Senedd proceedings. It provides a discretion for the Counsel General to refuse to provide documents or to answer questions in any Senedd proceedings about the operation of the system of criminal prosecution in any particular criminal case if they consider that doing so may:

- prejudice the proceedings in that case; or
- would otherwise be contrary to the public interest.

Legal proceedings

The Counsel General is responsible for overseeing the representation of the Welsh Government in the courts. Provided the Counsel General considers it appropriate to do so for the promotion or protection of the public interest, they may institute, defend or appear in any legal proceedings relating to matters with respect to any functions exercisable by the Welsh Government.

6. Acts of the Senedd and the Legislative Process

What are Acts of the Senedd?

Under Part 4 of the 2006 Act, the Senedd may make laws known as ‘Acts of the Senedd’ in all areas where it has legislative competence.

The model of devolution in Wales is based on the reserved powers model. This means that the Senedd has competence to pass laws on any matter except those matters which are expressly reserved to the UK Parliament in the 2006 Act.

The scope of the Senedd’s legislative competence is set out in Section 108A and Schedules 7A and 7B of the 2006 Act.

A Senedd Act has the same legal force and status as an Act of the UK Parliament. For example, conditional on being within the Senedd’s legislative competence, a Senedd Act can modify existing UK Parliament legislation and make new provision not covered by existing statutes.

However, the UK Parliament reserves the right to make laws for Wales, even on devolved matters over which the Senedd has legislative competence. This is subject to a constitutional convention that the UK Parliament will not normally do so without the consent of the Senedd.

Introducing a Bill

Under section 110 of the 2006 Act, Bills may be introduced in the Senedd by the First Minister, any of the Welsh Ministers, any Deputy Welsh Minister, the Counsel General or any Senedd Member.

The statutory provisions in the 2006 Act are supplemented by Senedd Standing Orders which provide a more complete framework controlling the process of Bill introduction in the Senedd. The Standing Orders provide that Bills may be introduced by:

- A member of the Welsh Government;
- Senedd committees;

- The Senedd Commission; or
- A Senedd Member chosen in a ballot process.

Different types of Senedd Bills

Senedd Bills may be:

- Public Bills - seeking to change the law as it applies to the general population;
- Private Bills – where a promoter, usually an individual or organisation is seeking particular powers that are in excess of, or in conflict with, the general law. Private Bills only change the law as it applies to the specific promoter, rather than the general population.
- Hybrid Bills - a Public Bill introduced by a member of the Welsh Government which affects a particular private interest of an individual or body in a manner different to the private interests of other individuals or bodies of the same category or class; or
- Consolidation Bills – a Bill introduced by a member of the Welsh Government for the purpose of consolidating existing primary legislation, secondary legislation, and common law.

Procedure for introducing Bills

Standing Order 26 sets out the detailed procedures for scrutinising Public Bills in the Senedd. This covers the procedure for initial introduction through to notification of Royal Assent.

Irrespective of who introduces a Bill to the Senedd, the person in charge of the Bill must, on or before the Bill's introduction, make a statement expressing their view that the provisions in the Bill would be within the Senedd's legislative competence. They must also make a written statement about the potential impact (if any) of the Bill's provisions on the justice system in England and Wales, known as a 'justice impact assessment'.

The Presiding Officer must also decide whether or not, in their view, it would be within the Senedd's legislative competence on or before the introduction of a Bill and state that decision.

A Bill must be introduced in both English and Welsh except in the following cases:

- when, in respect of a Government Bill, the Member in charge states in writing that, for specified reasons, it would not be appropriate in the circumstances or reasonably practicable for the Bill to be introduced in both languages; or
- when not doing so is in accordance with determinations issued by the Presiding Officer.

At the same time as a Member introduces a Bill, they must also lay an Explanatory Memorandum containing specific information. This includes their determination about legislative competence, the policy objectives of the Bill, an objective summary of what each provision is intended to do and best estimates of the Bill's costs implications.

Section 111 of the 2006 Act contains provisions regarding the procedural aspects of Bill proceedings in the Senedd. The effect of the provision is that Senedd Bills must go through at least three scrutiny stages in the Senedd:

- a general debate and an opportunity to vote on a Bill's general principles;
- a stage involving consideration of, an opportunity for members to vote on, the details of a Bill; and
- a final stage at which a Bill can be passed or rejected.

In practice however, as is discussed in more detail below, Senedd Bills generally go through a four-stage scrutiny process with the option of an additional Report Stage between stages 3 and 4.

*Note: there are separate procedures in place for the consideration of emergency Bills in the Senedd, explained here.

Super-majority requirement for certain legislation

The Wales Act 2017 amended the 2006 Act to introduce the concept of 'protected subject matters'.

If a Senedd Bill relates to a protected subject matter, the Bill cannot be passed and become law unless two-thirds of the total number of Senedd seats vote in favour of it at the final stage. This is known colloquially as a 'supermajority' vote.

In this context, a Bill 'relates to' a protected subject matter if it would modify, or confer power to modify any of the following matters:

- a. the name of the Senedd;
- b. the persons entitled to vote as electors at an election for membership of the Senedd;
- c. the system by which members of the Senedd are returned;
- d. the specification or number of constituencies, regions or any equivalent electoral area;
- e. the number of members to be returned for each constituency, region or equivalent electoral area; and
- f. the number of persons who may hold the office of Welsh Minister appointed under section 48 of the 2006 Act or the office of Deputy Welsh Minister.

The Presiding Officer is responsible in the first instance for deciding whether a Bill relates to a protected subject-matter. However, the Counsel General or UK Attorney General may refer the question to the Supreme Court for a decision within four weeks of rejection or acceptance of a Bill, dependent on the circumstances.

The legislative process

Before a Bill may be considered by the Senedd, it must be formally introduced into the Senedd. In practice, this means the Bill is laid with officials in the Senedd's Table Office who arrange for the Bill to be published on the Senedd's website.

Stage 1: Consideration of General Principles

This stage involves the consideration of the general principles of a Bill by one or more Senedd committee, followed by a debate and vote in the Senedd.

The committee focuses on the main purposes of the Bill. The committee may also invite representations from interested parties, and may take written and oral evidence to inform its work.

Once the committee has reported, the Senedd will be asked to debate and vote on the Bill's general principles, known as the 'Stage 1 debate'.

If the Senedd votes in favour of the Bill's general principles, the Bill progresses to Stage 2.

In some cases, proposed Bills, if passed, would lead to increased expenditure charged on the Welsh Consolidated Fund or give rise to new funding requirements from the fund. Because of this, the Presiding Officer decides in every case whether a financial resolution is required, giving the Senedd an opportunity to vote on any additional expenditure.

Stage 2 proceedings cannot take place until a financial resolution is agreed by the Senedd. If a financial resolution is not agreed within six months of the agreement by the Senedd of the general principles of a Bill at Stage 1, the Bill falls.

Stage 2: Detailed Consideration by Committee (amending stage)

This stage involves the detailed consideration of a Bill and proposed Member amendments by a committee.

Any Member of the Senedd may table amendments to a Bill and there is no limit to the number of amendments that may be tabled. However, only committee members may vote on amendments. This stage ends when all the amendments have been considered.

Stage 3: Consideration of a Bill in Plenary (amending stage)

This stage follows the completion of Stage 2 and involves the detailed consideration, by the Senedd as a whole, of the Bill and any amendments proposed by Members of the Senedd.

Any Member may table amendments to the Bill, but the Presiding Officer can decide which amendments will be considered by the Senedd.

Stage 3 is completed when the last amendment has been disposed of, or the last section or schedule has been deemed to be agreed, whichever is the later.

Other amending stages

If the Senedd wishes, it may also consider a Bill at Report Stage and Further Report Stage.

Amendments considered during Report Stage are subject to the same processes and procedures as amendments considered during Stage 3 proceedings.

Stage 4: Final stage

This is the last stage of the process and follows the completion of Stage 3 (or the final amending stage, as applicable). At this Stage, the Senedd votes on whether to pass the final text of the Bill.

Following the completion of Stage 3 (or Report Stage) proceedings, a motion may be tabled that the Bill be passed. Such motion may not be considered until at least five working days after the completion of Stage 3 (or Report Stage, as applicable). Alternatively, with the agreement of the Presiding Officer, a motion may move that the Bill be passed immediately.

If a Bill has been passed by the Senedd, there is a four week period, during which:

- the Counsel General or Attorney General can refer the question of whether the Bill, or any provision of the Bill, is within the Senedd's legislative competence to the Supreme Court for a decision; and
- the Secretary of State may make an order prohibiting the Bill from being sent for Royal Assent on certain grounds (such as believing that the Bill's provisions would have an adverse effect on the law as it operates in England).

If a challenge is not forthcoming, the Presiding Officer submits the Bill for Royal Assent by the King in Council. A Bill receives Royal Assent when Letters Patent (a type of legal instrument) under the Welsh Seal, signed with the Monarch's own hand, are notified to the Senedd's clerk.

Member Bills

The Presiding Officer must, as soon as reasonably practicable after a Senedd election, establish and publish a timetable for ballots to be held to determine the Members, other than a member of the Welsh Government, who wish to introduce a Member Bill. The timetable cannot include more than two ballots and no more than three Members can be selected in each ballot. This in effect limits the number of Member Bill proposals to six per Senedd term. If the Presiding Officer believes that exceptional circumstances apply, the timetable can provide for no ballots to be held.

The Presiding Officer must include in the ballot the names of all Members who have applied to be included. A Member who has previously been selected in a ballot in that Senedd term cannot apply.

If successful in a ballot, the Member must seek leave of the Senedd to introduce the Bill. The Member may table a motion seeking such consent within 60 working days of the ballot (not counting working days in a non-sitting week) and this must be accompanied by an explanatory statement setting out:

- i. the proposed title of the Bill;
- ii. the proposed policy objectives of the Bill;
- iii. details of any support received for the Bill, including details of any consultation carried out; and
- iv. an initial assessment of any costs and/or savings arising from the Bill.

Time must be made available for such a motion to be considered in Plenary within 80 working days of the date of the ballot (not counting working days in a non-sitting week).

If the Senedd agrees to the motion, the Member has thirteen months to introduce a Bill to give effect to the proposed policy objectives set out in the explanatory statement.

Once a Member Bill is introduced, it follows the same four-stage legislative process set out above.

Consolidation Bills

A consolidation Bill can be introduced by a member of the Welsh Government in order to consolidate existing primary legislation, secondary legislation and common law on a particular subject or topic.

The purpose of a consolidation Bill is to improve the accessibility of the law by bringing this all together in one single piece of legislation and to modernise its form and drafting. Consolidation Bills cannot bring about policy reform of any significance.

The Senedd's Standing Orders provide the framework for how a consolidation Bill can be developed and the types of changes that can be made to the law, for example, removing provisions that are now obsolete or addressing recommendations of the Law Commission.

A consolidation Bill is subject to special procedures in the Senedd. These are set out in the Senedd's Standing Orders, which were updated during the Fifth Senedd to include specific rules for consolidation bills.

A consolidation Bill must be accompanied by an explanation of how the law has been re-presented.

The Senedd must establish a 'responsible committee' to scrutinise the Bill.

The responsible committee will consider whether a consolidation Bill meets the requirements, and doesn't go too far into changing or introducing new policy.

The stages for a consolidation Bill differ from normal Bills. A consolidation Bill must go through the following stages before becoming law.

- Initial consideration: the responsible committee considers and reports on whether the Bill should proceed as a consolidation Bill. This report is then debated in Plenary, and if agreed the Bill progresses to the next stage;
- Detailed Committee consideration: the responsible committee considers amendments to the Bill tabled by any Senedd Member. After this stage the Committee must report on whether the consolidation Bill should proceed to the next stage;
- Detailed Senedd consideration: the responsible committee can recommend that the Senedd consider amendments, or that the Bill goes straight to the final stage of scrutiny; and
- Final stage: the Bill is debated and voted on in Plenary. If a majority of Members vote in favour of the Bill it will pass into law.

The Presiding Officer issued guidance to support the operation of Standing Order 26C on Consolidation Bills in October 2021.

Scrutiny of Senedd Bills by Supreme Court

A Senedd Act is not law if any of its provisions fall outside the Senedd's legislative competence.

To determine whether Senedd Bills, or any provision of a Bill, are within the Senedd's competence, Section 112 of the 2006 Act provides a mechanism for the Counsel General or UK Attorney-General to make a reference to the Supreme Court for a decision.

A reference may be made at any time within the four week period starting with the date the Bill was passed by the Senedd. This power has been used. In the Fourth Assembly, for example, two Bills were referred by the Attorney General and one by the Counsel General.

A reference may also be made to the Supreme Court by the Counsel or Attorney General to decide whether a Senedd Bill relates to a protected subject-matter. These are set out in Section 111A of the 2006 Act and include matters such as the persons entitled to vote at Senedd elections, the electoral system and the maximum permissible number of Welsh Ministers.

This Senedd Research article includes summaries of the Senedd legislation that has been referred to the Supreme Court.

7. Subordinate Legislation

Most of the United Kingdom's general public law is made through subordinate legislation. This is legislation made by a person or body under powers conferred on them by primary legislation.

In Wales, subordinate legislation is generally made by Welsh Ministers under powers conferred on them by enabling acts, such as Senedd Acts, Acts of the UK Parliament or Assembly Measures.

While Senedd Acts and Acts of Parliament provide a framework for laws, much of the technical detail is often subsequently added through subordinate legislation. It can be used to flesh out, update and amend primary legislation without the Senedd or UK Parliament having to pass a new Act each time.

Subordinate legislation is also known as delegated legislation because the power to make subordinate legislation is delegated by the enabling act. It is also commonly referred to as secondary legislation.

Subordinate legislation is defined in Schedule 1 to the Legislation (Wales) Act 2019 as:

[...] regulations, orders, rules, Orders in Council, schemes, warrants, byelaws and other instruments made under a Senedd Act, an Assembly Measure, an Act of Parliament or assimilated law.

In practice, most subordinate legislation is made using a form of legislation called a 'Welsh statutory instrument', or 'WSI' for short.

Senedd procedure on Statutory Instruments

The Statutory Instruments Act 1946 historically established a degree of uniformity in the way different types of subordinate legislation are made and scrutinised by parliaments in the UK. However, in 2025 the Senedd passed the Legislation (Procedure, Publication and Repeals) (Wales) Act 2025, which formalised and renamed the Senedd's procedures for scrutinising Welsh statutory instruments (WSIs). This Act amended the Legislation (Wales) Act 2019 ("the 2019 Act") to establish three procedures, which are set out in detail below.

Most Welsh statutory instruments are subject to Senedd scrutiny. When subordinate legislation is made as a Welsh statutory instrument, the rules and parliamentary procedures set out in the 2019 Act apply to that legislation. The enabling piece of primary legislation specifies the level of parliamentary control to be assigned to a particular WSI.

WSIs subject to parliamentary scrutiny may be assigned to one of the following forms of scrutiny procedure:

- Senedd annulment procedure;
- Senedd approval procedure; and
- Senedd confirmation procedure.

WSIs can also be subject to additional requirements, often referred to as an enhanced or 'super-affirmative' procedure.

Senedd annulment procedure

Most subordinate legislation made by the Welsh Ministers is subject to the Senedd annulment procedure.

Subordinate legislation subject to the Senedd annulment procedure becomes law on a stated date, which is usually included in the introductory text of the WSI. It remains law unless the Senedd objects by passing a motion resolving that the WSI should be annulled, or it is declared unlawful by the courts.

How does the process work?

- The relevant WSI is generally 'made' (formally signed off) by Welsh Ministers in the first instance;
- It is then laid before the Senedd and must be accompanied by an Explanatory Memorandum and, if relevant, any Regulatory Impact Assessment prepared in relation to that WSI;
- The WSI should be laid before the Senedd at least 21 days before it comes into force (discussed further below);
- Within 40 days of the relevant WSI being laid, any Member may table an unamendable motion calling on the Senedd to resolve that the instrument be annulled;
- If the Senedd votes to annul the WSI, it stops having legal effect.

Senedd approval procedure

More substantial and important pieces of subordinate legislation made by Welsh statutory instrument are subject to greater control than annulment procedure instruments.

WSIs subject to the Senedd approval procedure require the active approval of the Senedd before they can be made or come into force as law.

Where a WSI is subject to the Senedd approval procedure:

- The WSI is first laid before the Senedd in draft form. It must be accompanied by an Explanatory Memorandum and, if relevant, any Regulatory Impact Assessment prepared in relation to that WSI;
- Thereafter, any member of the Welsh Government may table an unamendable motion calling on the Senedd to approve the WSI;
- However, such a motion cannot be considered in Plenary until the earliest of the following:
 - the responsible Senedd legislative affairs committee has reported on the draft WSI;
 - and
 - Any other Senedd committee has reported on the WSI after giving notice to the Welsh Government of its intention to do so;
 - or
 - at least 20 days have elapsed since the WSI was laid.
- If the Senedd votes to approve the WSI, the Welsh Ministers can then make the WSI, and/or it can come into force or continue in force, as applicable.

Senedd confirmation procedure

The Senedd confirmation procedure is similar to the Senedd approval procedure. Under this procedure, the WSI is laid after being made by Welsh Ministers and is law immediately, but may not necessarily immediately come into force. However, the WSI cannot remain law unless it is approved by the Senedd within a certain period of time specified in the enactment (often 28 or 40 days).

Super-affirmative procedure

The super-affirmative, or 'enhanced procedure' provides for an even higher level of parliamentary scrutiny than the Senedd approval procedure.

This procedure is reserved for a small proportion of subordinate legislation. It is generally required under enabling acts to approve legislation which delegates wide executive powers by regulation.

While there is no uniform enhanced procedure, measures may include:

- imposing a requirement on Welsh Ministers to lay a draft before the Senedd for an extended period of time (typically for 60 days);
- taking into account representations made by the Senedd and its committees or other organisations and stakeholders during that period; and
- considering whether, in the light of such representations, to revise the final draft laid before the Senedd for approval.

The following pieces of legislation contain examples of enhanced procedural requirements before the Welsh Ministers may make certain types of subordinate legislation:

- Public Bodies Act 2011: Under Section 13, the Welsh Ministers have wide powers to modify the functions of various environmental and agricultural bodies by 'order' (a type of subordinate legislation).

The power to make an order is subject to a minimum 12-week consultation and a draft order, accompanied by an explanatory document, must be laid before the Senedd for at least 40 days before an order may be made.

- Local Government (Wales) Measure 2009: Section 31 of the Measure empowers the Welsh Ministers to modify or exclude the application of laws which apply to authorities by way of order in certain circumstances.

As a safeguard, Section 32 imposes consultation requirements on the Welsh Ministers, a requirement to lay a draft order before the Senedd for 60 days, consider representations received and explain changes made to the order as a result of such representations.

No procedure

Some statutory instruments are not subject to any formal Senedd procedure at all. For example, legislation specifying when primary legislation comes into force (known as ‘commencement orders’) is not subject to any formal procedure.

Committee scrutiny of Welsh Statutory Instruments

The way the Senedd deals with WSIs is set out under Standing Order 21.

This sets out the key functions of a Senedd committee which must consider and report on all relevant statutory and draft statutory instruments laid in the Senedd (the ‘responsible committee’).

Broadly, the responsible committee conducts two exercises in respect of SIs:

- Technical scrutiny – which is mandatory; and
- Merits scrutiny – which is discretionary.

Technical scrutiny

Under Standing Order 21.2, the responsible committee must undertake technical scrutiny of Welsh statutory instruments. This requires it to consider all relevant WSIs or draft WSIs laid in the Senedd and to report on whether the Senedd should pay special attention to the instrument on any of the following grounds:

- that there appears to be doubt as to whether it is intra vires (i.e. within the competence of Welsh Ministers);
- that it appears to make unusual or unexpected use of the powers conferred by the enactment under which it is made or to be made;
- that the enactment which gives the power to make it contains specific provisions excluding it from challenge in the courts;
- that it appears to have retrospective effect where the authorising enactment does not give express authority for this;

- that for any particular reason its form or meaning needs further explanation;
- that its drafting appears to be defective or it fails to fulfil statutory requirements;
- that there appear to be inconsistencies between the meaning of its English and Welsh texts;
- that it uses gender specific language;
- that it is not made or to be made in both English and Welsh;
- that there appears to have been unjustifiable delay in publishing it or laying it before the Senedd; or
- that there appears to have been unjustifiable delay in sending notification under sections 37E(6) and 37F(4) of the Legislation (Wales) Act 2019, and the equivalent provisions in Schedules 1B and 1C to it.

Legal advisers to the responsible committee consider all relevant WSIs against these grounds and prepare individual draft reports for each one identifying any technical matters arising (a 'draft report'). Members of the responsible committee receive draft reports in advance of Committee meetings. At their meetings, all technical reporting points are identified and the Committee may decide to note the points, seek clarifications from the Welsh Government or take other follow-up action. After approving a draft report, it becomes a committee report.

Merits scrutiny

Standing Order 21.3 gives the responsible committee discretion to undertake 'merits scrutiny'. This encompasses consideration of matters that are likely to be of interest to the Senedd, such as a Welsh statutory instrument that does not implement policy in the way claimed or that is considered to be politically contentious or significant. The responsible committee may report such 'merits points' for an WSI on the following grounds:

- that it imposes a charge on the Welsh Consolidated Fund or contains provisions requiring payments to be made to that Fund or any part of the government or to any local or public authority in consideration of any licence or consent or of any services to be rendered, or prescribes the amount of any such charge or payment;

- that it is of political or legal importance or gives rise to issues of public policy likely to be of interest to the Senedd;
- that it is inappropriate in view of the changed circumstances since the enactment under which it is made or is to be made was itself passed or made; or
- that it imperfectly achieves its policy objectives.

Dealing with Senedd annulment procedure WSIs

The responsible committee must make any report under Standing Orders 21.2 (mandatory technical reporting points) and 21.3 (discretionary merits reporting points) within 20 days of the instrument or draft being laid in the Senedd (excluding days when the Senedd is in recess for more than four days).

This is to enable the Committee's reports to be taken into account by the Senedd and the Welsh Government in good time before the statutory instrument is scheduled to come into force.

Instruments subject to the Senedd annulment procedure become and remain law unless an annulment motion is passed by the Senedd. Therefore, the timely laying of responsible committee reports makes the Senedd aware of reporting points identified by the Committee and provides an opportunity for any Senedd Member to table an annulment motion.

WSIs should be laid before the Senedd at least 21 days before coming into force. This is colloquially known as the 21-day rule. If this is not achieved (known as 'breaching the 21-day rule'), the Welsh Ministers must notify the Presiding Officer of this fact when the WSI is laid and explain the reasons why it happened.

Dealing with Senedd approval procedure WSIs

Similarly to instruments subject to the Senedd annulment procedure, motions to approve Welsh statutory instruments subject to the Senedd approval procedure cannot be considered in Plenary until the responsible committee or any other committee has reported on the draft instrument, or at least 20 days have elapsed since the instrument was laid - whichever is earlier.

If a committee other than the responsible committee intends to report on an instrument, it must notify the Welsh Government of its intention to do so within seven days of the WSI being laid.

Given that the Welsh Government may table a motion to approve a draft WSI after 20 days, the responsible committee must report within this period to ensure that its reporting points and views can be taken into account when the WSI is debated in Plenary before a vote.

Further subordinate legislation resources

Further information about WSIs may be found on the following websites:

- WSIs are published on the subordinate legislation pages on the Senedd's website as soon as they are laid.
- All UK and Welsh statutory instruments published since 1987 are available on legislation.gov.uk.

8. Legislative Consent

When the UK Parliament wishes to legislate on a subject matter which has already been devolved to the Senedd, Scottish Parliament or Northern Ireland Assembly, convention requires it to receive consent in advance by the relevant devolved legislature. Such consent is given through Legislative Consent Motions.

Background: The ‘Sewel Convention’

The legislative consent convention providing that the UK Parliament will not normally legislate in devolved policy areas without devolved consent is colloquially known as the ‘Sewel Convention’.

It was so-called after Lord Sewel, who was Minister of State in the Scottish Office during the passage of what became the Scotland Act 1998. During the Bill’s Committee stage, Lord Sewel said that the Government expected a:

[...] convention to be established that Westminster would not normally legislate with regard to matters within the competence of the Scottish parliament without the consent of that parliament.

Originally embodying this convention in practice, a Memorandum of Understanding agreed between the UK Government and devolved legislatures in 2001, and subsequently updated in 2012, states:

The United Kingdom Parliament retains authority to legislate on any issue, whether devolved or not. It is ultimately for Parliament to decide what use to make of that power. However, the UK Government will proceed in accordance with the convention that the UK Parliament would not normally legislate with regard to devolved matters except with the agreement of the devolved legislature. The devolved administrations will be responsible for seeking such agreement as may be required for this purpose on an approach from the UK Government.

When the UK Government subsequently planned to pass a Bill within Scottish devolved competence, it sought the consent of the Scottish Parliament for the inclusion of such provisions.

Thereafter, the Scottish Government prepared Sewel Memorandums setting out the Bill's objectives and usually indicating whether, in its view, the Parliament should consent to the proposed provisions. The Bill was then debated and the Scottish Parliament voted on a 'Sewel Motion' to either grant or refuse consent.

Since 30 November 2005, a change of terminology saw Sewel Motions become known as 'Legislative Consent Motions', and 'Sewel Memorandums' replaced with 'Legislative Consent Memorandums'.

Legislative consent motions and the Senedd

Since the then Assembly first acquired primary legislative powers under the 2006 Act, the principles of legislative consent have been extended to Wales.

The Wales Act 2017 amended the Government of Wales Act 2006 to place the Sewel Convention on a statutory footing. Section 107(5) of the 2006 Act recognises that the power of the Senedd to make Acts of the Senedd does not affect the power of the UK Parliament to make laws for Wales, but states that:

[...] it is recognised that the Parliament of the United Kingdom will not normally legislate with regard to devolved matters without the consent of the Senedd.

The UK Government's Devolution Guidance Note on post-devolution primary legislation affecting Wales emphasises the importance of dialogue between Whitehall Departments and the Welsh Government when formulating legislative proposals. It states:

As early as possible in policy development, UK government departmental Bill teams should contact the Wales Office to seek initial advice before engaging with the Welsh Government on any Welsh devolution issues relating to a Bill. Departmental Bill teams should develop close working relationships with the Welsh Government on any specific areas of devolved policy relating to those Bills, and ensure timely sharing of information from an early stage in the legislative process. The Wales Office advises and supports departments in doing this.

When is a Legislative Consent Memorandum required?

Standing Order 29 details how the Senedd deals with consent in relation to UK Parliamentary Bills.

The procedures under Standing Order 29 relate to any 'Relevant Bill'. This is defined as a Bill under consideration in the UK Parliament which makes relevant provision in relation to Wales that has regard to devolved matters.

The Standing Orders provide that a member of the Welsh Government must lay a Legislative Consent Memorandum before the Senedd in relation to:

- i. any UK Government Bill that is a relevant Bill on its introduction to the first House, normally no later than two weeks after introduction;
- ii. any UK Private Member's Bill that was a relevant Bill on introduction and remains a relevant Bill after the first amending stage in the House in which it was introduced, normally no later than two weeks after it completes that stage;
- iii. any Bill introduced into the UK Parliament that, by virtue of amendments:
 - i. agreed to; or
 - ii. tabled by a Minister of the Crown or published with the name of a Minister of the Crown in support,in either House, makes (or would make) relevant provision for the first time or beyond the limits of any consent previously given by the Senedd, normally no later than two weeks after the amendments are tabled or agreed to.

Under Standing Order 29.2A, a Legislative Consent Memorandum must also be laid by any Senedd member, other than a member of the Welsh Government, who intends to table a legislative consent motion in respect of a relevant Bill. However, they must not normally do so until after a memorandum has been laid by a member of the Welsh Government.

What information must a Legislative Consent Memorandum contain?

Under Standing Order 29.3, a Legislative Consent Memorandum must, amongst other things:

- summarise the policy objectives of the Bill;
- specify the extent to which the Bill makes (or would make) relevant provision (defined above); and
- explain whether it is considered appropriate or that provision to be made and for it to be made by means of the Bill.

What happens after a Legislative Consent Memorandum has been laid?

The Senedd's Business Committee must normally refer any legislative consent memorandum to one or more Senedd committees for consideration. It must also establish and publish a timetable for those committees to consider and report on it.

Once a Legislative Consent Memorandum has been laid, a member of the Welsh Government, or any Senedd Member which has laid their own Legislative Consent Memorandum, may table a legislative consent motion seeking the Senedd's agreement to the inclusion of a relevant provision in a relevant Bill. Whilst the Standing Orders do not require a consent motion to be tabled, it has been determined that the Senedd cannot be said to have consented to the relevant provision unless it has had an opportunity to vote on a motion.

If a consent motion is tabled, the Senedd must consider it. However, if a consent memorandum has been referred to a committee for consideration, a consent motion cannot be debated until the applicable committee has reported, or the deadline for reporting has been reached.

Legislative consent motions are considered in Plenary by way of a debate, culminating in a vote on whether to approve or reject the motion.

The legal nature of the Sewel convention

The Sewel Convention is a non-binding, non-justiciable, political convention which does not give rise to legally enforceable obligations.

As discussed above, before being placed on a statutory footing in the devolution settlements, the convention was embodied in the Memorandum of Understanding between the UK and devolved governments. Whilst the Memorandum set out the UK Government's commitment to the legislative consent convention, it also stated:

This Memorandum is a statement of political intent, and should not be interpreted as a binding agreement. It does not create legal obligations between the parties. It is intended to be binding in honour only.

Following legal codification of the Sewel Convention, its legal nature was considered by the Supreme Court in the 2017 Miller case.

Despite statutory codification, the court was not persuaded that this had converted it into a rule which could be interpreted and enforced by the courts. It considered that the purpose of placing the convention on a statutory footing was to entrench it as a convention.

The court applied the 'well-established principled' - courts of law cannot enforce political conventions.

The Supreme Court recognised that the convention had an important role in facilitating harmonious relationships between the UK Parliament and the devolved legislatures. It also said that the Sewel Convention operated as a political constraint on the activity of the UK Parliament. However, ultimately, it did not consider that the manner of its operation lay within the constitutional remit of the judiciary.

It follows that any sanction for failing to observe the Sewel Convention is political, rather than legal, in nature.

9. The Secretary of State for Wales

The Secretary of State for Wales ('Secretary of State') is a UK Government cabinet member responsible for the overall strategic direction of the UK Government in Wales. The Secretary of State is not a member of the Senedd or the Welsh Government.

The post was originally created in 1964 by the Labour Government under the Rt.Hon. Harold Wilson MP.

The Secretary of State is supported by a Parliamentary Under Secretary of State. Both are supported by the Wales Office.

Its website states:

The Wales Office supports the Welsh Secretary and the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State in promoting the best interests of Wales within a stronger United Kingdom. It ensures Welsh interests are represented at the heart of the UK government and the UK government's responsibilities are represented in Wales.

The Wales Office's objectives are to:

- Promote the Welsh economy and the economic interests of Wales;
- Ensure the devolution settlement continues to deliver a clear, fair and strong settlement for Wales; and
- Represent Wales' interests within the UK government, and to promote a wider understanding of UK government policies in Wales.

Functions of the Secretary of State for Wales

Under the Government of Wales Act 1998, most of the Secretary of State's functions transferred to the then National Assembly for Wales.

The Secretary of State's current functions and role are set out in more detail in the UK Government's 2005 Devolution Guidance Note 4. The document has not been updated since the Assembly gained full law-making powers in 2011, or since the Assembly was renamed Senedd Cymru. It states that the Secretary for State shall:

- act as guardian of the devolution settlement in Wales;
- ensure that the interest of Wales are fully taken into account by the UK Government in making decisions which will have effect in Wales;
- represent the UK Government in Wales; and
- oversee the progress through the UK Parliament of primary legislation making separate provision for Wales.

The Secretary of State for Wales and Senedd elections

Under Section 13A of the 2006 Act (inserted by the Wales Act 2017), the Secretary of State may make provision to combine the polls at ordinary and extraordinary Senedd elections with the polls at certain UK Parliamentary elections. Using this power, ordinary Senedd elections can be combined with UK Parliament by-elections, and extraordinary Senedd elections can be combined with UK Parliament by-elections and general elections. The Secretary of State must obtain the agreement of the Welsh Ministers before making any such regulations.

10. Glossary of Terms

This section contains a glossary of key terms used in the Welsh Parliamentary context

Act of Parliament	A Bill that has been passed by the UK Parliament and received Royal Assent. It is also sometimes referred to as a 'statute' and is a form of primary legislation.
Act of the Senedd	A Bill that has been passed by the Senedd and received Royal Assent. It is also sometimes referred to as a Senedd Act and is a form of primary legislation.
Assembly Measure	A form of primary legislation made by the Assembly between 2007 and 2011 under the Government of Wales Act 2006 (GoWA) (as originally introduced).
Barnett Formula	This is used to calculate the change in the block grant allocated to the Welsh Government. If the UK Government makes spending changes in England to areas that are fully or partially devolved, the block grant for Wales will also generally change. This is often referred to as a 'consequential'.
Bill	A proposed Act of the Senedd, UK Parliament, Scottish Parliament or Northern Ireland Assembly.
Block Grant	The element of each devolved Government's funding which comes from the UK Government. The monies received are placed in the Welsh Consolidated Fund.
Committee of the Whole Senedd	This sits when amendments to a Bill are considered at Stage 2 proceedings by all Senedd

	Members, rather than just by those elected to a specific committee.
Conferred Powers Model	Under this model of devolution, a legislature can only pass laws in relation to matters that have been expressly conferred on it. The devolution settlement in Wales used to be based on the Conferred Powers Model where the Assembly's legislative competence was limited to making laws in twenty one subject areas where the UK Parliament had expressly given it powers to do so. The Wales Act 2017 changed the devolution settlement in Wales to a Reserved Powers Model.
Constitution	The body of fundamental principles, laws, rules, conventions and procedures according to which a state is governed. Unlike most countries, the UK does not have a codified constitution contained in a single document. Rather, its constitution is uncodified and has developed over centuries comprising statute law, common law, conventions and the Royal Prerogative.
Constitutional Convention	This term has two separate and distinct meanings. Depending on the context, it may mean: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. The customary practices and rules relating to the relationship between the Crown, Governments, Parliaments and judiciary, or the exercise of their respective powers. They are not legally binding, but breach of convention may have political consequences. (An example is the Sewel Convention). or; <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 2. A representative body convened to draw up or propose changes to a country's constitution. The proposals may then be used to inform the future constitutional settlement, sometimes subject to a referendum.

Common Frameworks	Agreements between the UK and devolved governments on how to manage divergence between different parts of the UK, in certain policy areas formerly governed at EU level. They are sometimes underpinned by legislation and are subject to scrutiny in the UK's four legislatures.
Council of the Nations and Regions	An intergovernmental body set up to facilitate partnership working between the UK Government, devolved governments, the Mayor of London and Mayors of Combined Authorities and Mayors of Combined County Authorities. A full membership of the Council is provided on the UK Government website .
Counsel General	The chief legal adviser to the Welsh Government. Although a member of the Welsh Government, they are not a Welsh Minister. Serving Senedd Members have generally been appointed to the role, including the current Counsel General, but they need not be an MS.
Delegated Legislation	See Subordinate Legislation
Devolved Areas or Devolved Matters	Matters which are within the Senedd's legislative competence.
Devolution Settlement	A general term used to describe the devolution arrangements in each devolved nation of the UK. The current devolution settlement for Wales is set out in GoWA and is based on the Reserved Powers Model.
Deputy Welsh Minister	A serving Senedd Member appointed to assist the First Minister, a Welsh Minister or the Counsel General in the exercise of their functions. The collective number of Deputy Welsh Ministers and Welsh Ministers (excluding the First Minister) cannot exceed seventeen persons under GoWA.

	These members of the government are currently referred to as Ministers.
Dunlop Review	A review conducted by Lord Dunlop in 2019 to determine whether the UK Government was working in the most effective way possible to 'realise fully all the benefits' of being a United Kingdom. It made recommendations on the machinery of government, Civil Service capability, spending, intergovernmental relations, public appointments and communications.
Executive	The branch of government under the separation of powers doctrine which is responsible for formulating policy and proposing legislation. Both the Welsh and UK Governments comprise the executive in Wales.
Finance Interministerial Standing Committee (F:ISC)	An interministerial committee consisting of representatives of HM Treasury and the devolved governments' finance ministers. The committee considers finance and funding matters.
First Minister	A Member of the Senedd nominated by the Senedd and appointed by the Monarch to be First Minister. They are the leader of the Welsh Government.
Government of Wales Act 1998	An Act of Parliament that provided the original legislative basis for Wales' devolution settlement. It established the National Assembly for Wales as a corporate body. Much of the Act was repealed by the Government of Wales Act 2006.
Government of Wales Act 2006 ('GoWA')	An Act of Parliament which provides the legislative basis for Wales' devolution settlement. The Act contains provision about: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Senedd general elections; ▪ The composition and functions of the Welsh Government;

	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ The Senedd’s power to pass laws, including the scope of its legislative competence; and ▪ Financial matters, such as national borrowing and expenditure.
Intergovernmental Agreements (‘IGA’)	A generally non-binding agreement entered into between two or more governments. In a Welsh constitutional context, the term often relates to agreements entered into between the Welsh and UK Governments as a way of agreeing on the use of certain powers in devolved areas.
Intergovernmental Relations Review	A review into intergovernmental relations between the four UK nations. Led by the Cabinet-Office; officials and Ministers from all four administrations set out new intergovernmental structures. The review was published in January 2022.
Interministerial Groups (IMGs)	The first tier of intergovernmental engagement structures. Regular meetings should take place between Ministers from the four UK governments at portfolio-level.
Interministerial Standing Committee (IMSC)	The middle tier of intergovernmental engagement structures. This committee considers issues which cannot be considered at the portfolio-level within the relevant IMG, brings together strategic considerations affecting many different portfolios and discusses any cross-cutting international issues.
Legislative Competence	The term used to describe the scope of the Senedd’s power to make laws. A provision must satisfy each test under Section 108A of GoWA to be within the Senedd’s legislative competence. A Senedd Act is not law if any of its provisions fall outside the Senedd’s legislative competence.

Legislative Competence Order	An Order in Council, in use between 2007-2011, to amend Schedules 7A and 7B of GoWA, which are, respectively, the list of Reserved Matters and the general restrictions on the Senedd’s ability to legislate.
Legislative Consent Memorandum	A memorandum laid before the Senedd in respect of any Bill introduced in the UK Parliament which makes provision in relation to Wales for any purpose within the legislative competence of the Senedd or which modifies its legislative competence (a ‘Relevant Bill’). The Memorandum must, inter alia, summarise the policy objectives of the Relevant Bill and explain whether it’s considered appropriate for that provision to be made. A legislative consent memorandum relating to a Relevant Bill must be laid before the Senedd by a member of the Welsh Government, and by any Senedd Member who intends to table their own legislative consent motion.
Legislative Consent Motion	The means by which the Senedd formally indicates its consent for the UK Parliament to pass laws on devolved matters. After a legislative consent memorandum has been laid, a member of the Welsh Government (or a Senedd Member which has laid their own legislative consent memorandum) may subsequently table a legislative consent motion seeking the Senedd’s agreement to the proposed provision in a relevant Bill. Senedd Members debate and vote on the motion to decide whether consent should be given. Legislative Consent Motions were previously known as Sewel Motions (see Sewel Convention).
Legislative Scrutiny	The detailed examination of primary and subordinate legislation and their related documentation by Senedd committees.

Legislature	A law-making body where new laws are debated and passed. A legislature also holds the executive to account for its decisions and policies (see Separation of Powers). The Senedd and UK Parliament are both legislatures.
Llywydd	Also called ‘Presiding Officer’ in English, the Llywydd is elected by all Members of the Senedd and serves the Senedd impartially. Their main role is to chair Plenary, maintain order in the Siambwr and ensure that Standing Orders are followed. The Llywydd also has one or two Deputies who alternate with them in chairing Plenary sessions and attends meetings and functions to raise the profile of the Senedd.
Member of the Senedd, Member, or MS	A person elected to the Senedd in an election.
Motion	A proposal made for the purpose of obtaining a decision from the Senedd.
National Assembly for Wales, the Welsh Assembly, or Assembly.	The Senedd’s previous name. The terminology was updated under the Senedd and Election (Wales) Act 2020 (see Senedd Cymru) The Assembly was originally established under the Government of Wales Act 1998 following the 1997 referendum.
Order in Council	Statutory or Prerogative Orders which have been personally approved by the Monarch at a meeting of the Privy Council. Statutory Orders are made under powers conferred on the Monarch by primary legislation. Prerogative Orders are made using the inherent power of the Crown. Both types have force in law. In practice, most Statutory Orders are made by statutory instruments. (See Privy Council)
Parliamentary Sovereignty	The principle in UK constitutional law that the UK Parliament is the supreme legal authority in the

	UK. Under its orthodox understanding, the UK Parliament has unlimited power to make or unmake any laws as it sees fit. Generally, the courts cannot overrule its legislation and no Parliament can pass laws that future Parliaments cannot change. It is also sometimes known as 'parliamentary supremacy'.
Plenary	A full meeting of Senedd Members in the Siambwr to conduct business.
Presiding Officer	See 'Llywydd.'
Primary legislation	The general term used to describe Acts of the Senedd, Acts of Parliament and Assembly Measures.
Prime Minister and Heads of Devolved Governments Council	The top tier of intergovernmental engagement which oversees relations between the UK and devolved governments.
Privy Council	A body to advise the Monarch on exercising their Royal Prerogative functions or those functions assigned to the Sovereign by Acts of Parliament. Decisions of the Privy Council are recorded in Orders which have the force of law (see Orders in Council). Most Orders are Government decision which are subsequently approved by the Monarch as a matter of course.
Proceedings of the Senedd	Any proceedings of the Senedd, including Plenary and committee meetings.
Protected Enactment	An Act, or sections of an Act, that the Senedd cannot make modifications of, or confer power by subordinate legislation to make modification of, as set out in paragraph 5 of Schedule 7B of GoWA.
Protected subject-matter	Section 111A of GoWA contains a list of matters called 'protected subject-matters'. Examples include the persons entitled to vote at Senedd elections, the electoral system and the maximum permissible number of Welsh Ministers.

	The Senedd can still pass Bills on protected subject-matters, but GoWA provides that at least two-thirds of the total number of Senedd seats must vote for such a Bill to pass. This is known as a supermajority of the Senedd. The Llywydd initially decides whether a Bill relates to a protected subject-matter, but the determination may be referred to the Supreme Court by the Counsel General or Attorney-General.
Referendum	The procedure by which a political question is referred to the electorate for a decision through a vote. (See 1979, 1999 and 2011 Referendum, below).
Reserved Matters	These are matters or specific subject areas which are expressly reserved to the UK Parliament in GoWA, and over which the Senedd cannot legislate. The list of Reserved Matters are divided into general and specific reservations under Schedule 7A of GoWA. If a provision in a Senedd Act ‘relates to’ a Reserved Matter, it is outside the Senedd’s legislative competence. Section 108A(6) of GoWA and case law assists with the interpretation of ‘relates to’ in this context.
Reserved Powers Model	Under this model of devolution, a legislature can pass laws on any matter unless it is expressly prevented from doing so. The Wales Act 2017 changed the devolution settlement in Wales from a Conferred Powers Model to a Reserved Powers Model. This means the Senedd can pass laws on all matters, except reserved matters.
Retained EU Law	The body of EU law converted into domestic law on 31 December 2020 under the EU (Withdrawal) Act 2018.

	The Act essentially took a snapshot of EU laws which applied in the UK when the EU transition period ended. This included directly applicable EU regulations and laws implementing EU Directives. To ensure Retained EU laws (REUL) work in a domestic context after the UK left the EU, the governments of the UK made a considerable number of amendments to them through subordinate legislation. Under the Act, RUELE which was not revoked by the end of 2023 became known as assimilated law. Unlike REUL, assimilated law is not interpreted in line with EU principles of interpretation.
Royal Assent	The final stage of the legislative process. This is the Monarch's agreement that is required to make a Bill into an Act of the Senedd or Parliament. While the Monarch technically has the right to refuse, assent is today a constitutional convention and regarded as a formality.
Secondary Legislation	See Subordinate Legislation.
Secretary of State for Wales	A UK Government cabinet member responsible for the overall strategic direction of the UK Government in Wales. The office holder: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ must ensure that the interests of Wales are fully taken into account by the UK Government in making decisions that will have effect in Wales; ▪ represents the UK Government in Wales; and ▪ is responsible for ensuring the passage of Wales-only legislation through Parliament.
